Meteoroid impacts present a significant hazard to spacecraft : meteoroids a few mm in diameter strike operational satellites every few years

Meteoroid density governs the penetration depth of impacts.

We apply Dynamic Nested Sampling to quantify the resulting physical uncertainties

Combined EMCCD and CAMO data reveal that most sporadic meteoroids in our sample are structurally heterogeneous with porous cometary material dominating and a small dense, iron-rich component.

M. Vovk[1], P. G. Brown[1], D. Vida[1], D. Lee[2], M. Millinger[3], J. Domagala-Tang[1], E. G. Harmos[1]

[1]University of Western Ontario,
[2]NASA Meteoroid Environment Office,
[3]ESA Space Environments and Effects

NASA Coop. Agmt. 80NSSC24M0060
ESA EISI Cntr. 4000145350